Council favors tougher planning regulations

by Lindy Magner

At Tuesday's noon meeting, council members as well as citizens questioned the planning policies of the city which allow apartments and other multifamily dwellings on parcels smaller than one acre to be constructed without public review.

Several residents commented that a lack of control on smaller projects was impacting Central Avenue neighborhoods, bringing traffic problems and three-story buildings which block views.

The 7000 to 7600 blocks of Central Avenue are zoned medium residential, thus allowing a mix of apartments and homes.

Following discussion, the council directed city staff to research possible actions it may take to ameliorate the situation, ranging from declaring a moratorium on multiresidential construction until an update of the city's general plan is completed, to amending the current zoning ordinance or changing the planning department policies.

City Manager Doug Yount explained that the zoning issue will be addressed by the update of the general plan which will begin soon and should be near completion next fall. He said that a change in the review process is something which could be considered without waiting for the completion of the plan's update.

Councilwoman Mary Sessom, whose concerns caused the item to be placed on the council's agenda, stated that the city should be as concerned with smaller development as it is with larger projects, since they also impact neighborhoods.

"No one is caring if these (structures) conform with the neighborhoods it's not fair to the citizens," she said, noting that the complexes are often ugly, box-like buildings lacking in open space or play facilities for children, and can be magnets for illegal activity.

Former Councilwoman Lois Heiserman, speaking as a resident, was the first to suggest that a moratorium on constructing multi-family complexes be declared.

"You need to get input from the public and get this thing worked out. The planning staff doesn't live here and don't give a damn - they don't drive through the city and see what I see," she said.

Central Avenue resident Jay Cochrane commented that he had implored council three years ago to follow the lead of other cities in creating a design review board which would review development projects.

"I'd like to see the word 'planning' redefined - there is none here," he said, noting that three years ago he "griped" to the council about a three-story apartments building which was being constructed next door to his home as well as about other multifamily developments on Central Avenue.

"You dumped a motel into our neighborhood and Central Avenue has become a half-mile racetrack; the safety of children is in question," he said. "There needs to be a rezoning of the area immediately," he added, suggesting that the residents should be consulted on projects planned for their neighborhoods.

Mayor Bob Burns commented that involving neighbors in such decisions would be fruitless.

"If you go to the neighbors to get input, the decision will be 'no build.' Change is something people resist," he said.

Councilman Craig Lake agreed that the city needs a design review board or at least "another process" so that developers cannot erect "boxes" like the Central Avenue apartment building.

"When I look at that, I wonder how could this have possibly fallen in with the city's guidelines. To me, that building is the epitome of why we need another process," he said.

Councilman Tom Clabby said he was "uncomfortable" with imposing a moratorium, suggesting that the city's policy be amended so that "a flag goes up whenever a multi-unit project comes in," and these projects are no longer approved without some discussion.

Community Development Director Jim Butler explained that the city's policy requires the planning staff to routinely approve projects of less than one acre in size which meet the outlined requirements of density, landscaping and open space.

"We approved the box-like apartments on Central because we had no authority to do otherwise," he said. "The limitations we can impose on these projects are very slim," he said after the meeting, noting that buildings in the medium residential zone can be up to 25 feet in height, which generally translates to a two-story building, though obviously a three-story building can be constructed with-

East County 'Election Central'

East County election results were posted for candidates, supporters and other interested area residents at the East San Diego County Board of Realtors on Tuesday night. For results of the various races, see story below.

Incumbents, pro-lifers win big

by Steven Saint

While political observers across the country are talking about drastic changes resulting from Tuesday's elections, East County voters appear to be happy with things the way they are.

In East County districts, where close to half the registered voters stayed home on Election Day, incumbents were generally returned to office. In cases where incumbents lost - like Assemblyman Tom Connolly's handy beating by controversial Republican challenger Steve Baldwin - the winners were usually associated with the pro-life, Religious Right movement.

School board incumbents did well, with the notable exception of county Board of Education member Marty Block, who lost to Thomas Davies despite spending twice the money as Davies had of Oct. 22. Davies, promoted by pro-life organizations, beat Block by over 8,000 votes.

The victorious school board incumbents include Rebecca Clark, Rick Alexander and Victor Calderon on the Grossmont-Cuyamaca Community College District board; June Mott and Maynard Olsen on the Grossmont Union High School District board; and Nancye Splinter and Marsha Saben in Cajon Valley, and Sandy Pugliese and Barbara Ryan in Santee.

A notable exception among the college board races was incumbent Rochelle Bastien's finish behind two candidates with relatively smaller campaign efforts. Bastien has spent over $3,000 on her campaign as of Oct. 22, while none of her opponents had spent even $1,000, according to campaign disclosure documents at the county Registrar of Voters.

Carolyn Griffin, an East County newcomer on a three-person slate associated with the Religious Right, garnered twice as many votes as Bastien. Steven Hall, who did not even file a statement for the sample ballot pamphlet, came in second with over 28 percent of the vote.

Griffin may have benefited from her pro-life connections, but that did not help her ally, Dan Dinardo, who lost to Alexander by over 7,000 votes.

The big winner in the Grossmont Union High School race was El Cajon police officer Kevin La Chapelle, a political newcomer also endorsed by pro-life organizations. A second pro-life candidate, Robert Chatham, came in fourth.

On the other side, the two candidates who spent over $10,000 as of Oct. 22, Vallera Joyner Johnson and Guy Hलगren came in fifth and seventh.

In Lemon Grove, Mike Ott beat the trend and incumbents Carol Chubb and Lou Ann Holaday. Ott received 4,272 votes, Chubb 2,901, Holaday 2,900, George Gastil 2,773, Ed Pettis 2,409 and Richard Schult 2,034.

In Cajon Valley, where incumbents Splinter and Saben came in first and second, second-time candidate Jill Barto won the third seat. Barto, a pro-life conservative associated with the California Republican Assembly, beat Cathy Hilton by less than 1,000 votes. Hilton was the race's top spender, at $5,585 as of Oct. 22.

In La Mesa-Spring Valley, Barbara Carr, the only incumbent running for re-election, was the top vote-getter, but the only victorious candidate of the three endorsed by the Citizens for Responsible Education, a mainstream, grassroots group. Med Beauregard, a newcomer endorsed by the Pro-Life Council won one of the remaining two seats, following second-place finisher Penny Hलगren, who ran an aggressive campaign. Municipal incumbents were also favored, including La Mesa's Barry Jantz, Jay La Suer and Art Madrid.

The only arena where incumbency took its toll was on water district boards. Helix Water District board member Bill Verbeck lost his seat to civil engineer James Lewanski, and two of the three Padre Dam incumbents, Jerry Johnson and Augie Scalzitti, lost to challengers Dan McMillan and Andy Menchek, respectively. Incumbent Doug Wilson was re-elected.

Butler also explained that state law allows a developer to exceed the number of units allowed in multiresidential projects if the developer will designate 20 percent of the units as low-income housing.

According to Butler, the review of smaller projects would not burden the staff, since the city has been presented with only several new apartments projects over the last two years. However, he noted that the city's current policy of not requiring discretionary review of small projects has been praised by the state as a step which facilitates the development of low-income housing since the expediency of the process tends to keep construction costs lower.

General plan consultant hired

Tuesday, the City Council approved the selection of Lettieri-McIntyre & Associates as the consultant which will develop the city's general plan update.

That update is anticipated to be completed in about 18 months. An advisory committee consisting of residents is now being formed to work with the consultant in developing the update which will focus on the land-use and circulation elements of the city's general plan.

According to City Manager Doug Yount, the general plan update has proved more expensive than anticipated.

Seven proposals ranging in cost from $157,510 to $232,270 were submitted to the council for consideration, with three of the favored applicants interviewed by a selection committee.

The chosen proposal will cost the city $186,690. The contract will be brought to council for approval at the Dec. 6 council meeting.

The general plan has not been updated since it was adopted shortly after the city incorporated.

City turns down parcel offer

Tuesday, the City Council turned down an offer for a 1.3-acre parcel owned by the city.

Located adjacent to 6949 Central Ave. within Special Treatment Area III (STA III), the land was originally marked for the anticipated extension of College Avenue, a project which is no longer needed.

According to City Manager Doug Yount, the parcel provides the best access to the special treatment district and its loss would hamper access as well as violate the intent of the special district to preserve that area for a single development project.

Through a real estate agent, a developer wishing to construct a single-family dwelling on the parcel offered the city $57,404.

"Even if the price was five times that, staff would be recommending not to sell. This parcel is needed to get into STA III and will be a bargaining chip for that development," Yount said.

B-Words Personal comments of Mayor Bob Burns

Fire merger

The day after the long City Council session on the Fire Department consolidation issue, I put my thoughts on paper.

With an almost full house, I felt that we had a good cross section of our citizenry and that the message was very clear as to the general public's feeling in the matter. However, there are certainly many of our residents who were not represented or had a chance to voice their opinions. Thus, the meat of this column.

It is an axiom that by combining resources and manpower in any context, more efficiency and economical bang for the buck can be the result. By joining in purchasing, staffing, management, and use of facilities, we should get more service for the dollar. The problem is that it seldom does. In fact it is historic that usually bigger is not better, it is worse. When basic local control is absent, and when the identity and predestined uses of revenues are lost in the hierarchy, things go awry.

The audience was vocal and emphatic in the vast majority of opinion that a merger with La Mesas Fire Department was not desired. The reasons were many and often emotionally disclosed. For a while the firefighters of Lemon Grove and La Mesa were seemingly the targets of the barrage. It did become clear that the unfriendly thrust of the speakers was more properly aimed at the city of La Mesa administration.

Past slights and wounds, whether perceived or true, make for distrust. It was obvious that the feeling prevailed that somehow we would be had by the bigger municipality over the Eastridge Hill. Many speakers stated that they were speaking for others who were not present.

The City Council decided, at long last, to reject the proposal and not invest anymore money or staff time on the idea, at the present time. There were some valid arguments that pointed out areas where our Fire Department could be improved. City staff has been directed to conduct an in-house study to specify the needs and the costs for future budgets. It was also quite obvious that much of what would accrue with consolidation, could only be achieved with a much larger organization. Advancement opportunities and additional specialized duties would certainly be possible with a larger body of manpower.

In the days before we instituted mutual aid between fire departments, and the automatic response that eliminated jurisdictional borders, this idea of merger would have been an excellent option, and I would have surely favored it. But we already have those benefits, and the gain for the Lemon Grove resident and taxpayer is murky and minimal. The ISO rating that would improve from 3 to 2 would not lower our insurance rates. Our firefighters have a faster response time to our homes than their La Mesa counterparts.

Our firefighters are without equal, and our station is new, with well-maintained, up-to-date rolling stock. Our residents love our department and do not want to give it up, or fix that which is not broken.

La Mesa has more financial problems than does Lemon Grove. The government in place is of questionable ability according to some. Past injuries to Lemon Grove through LAFCO and in our efforts to incorporate are still painful in the minds of longtime residents. Disputes between our two cities in the areas of solid wastes, 800-megahertz system, and other issues, cause doubt that a fully mutual "marriage" of councils would be possible.

No question that the theory is sound, but axioms are cold, hard and devoid of human emotion. Ah, that's the rub and it always will be. Many of us old-timers recall the long and hard work that was expanded in achieving incorporation and control over our own destiny in 1977.

The consolidation, merger, absorption, or what ever it would be called, just smacks of our reverting back to the "before incorporation" situation. I applaud the people who turned out for the hearing and the council for its unanimous decision.

Prep journalists spend a day at 'Juvie'

by Sara Agahan
Santana High School
Consultant staff

"BELLIES!"

It's not an uncommon command heard in the halls. When teens hear the command, they immediately drop to the ground, hands behind their back, or else risk being knocked down by a coach.

But it's not the football or swim coach at the local high school, the command comes from correctional officers at the county Juvenile Hall detention center. The detainees are not wearing the latest fads, but the drab, blue uniforms given to them. There's no competition about who's wearing what - they all dress alike. Their clothes are just one of the reminders of how long they will stay in the cold halls of "Juvie." Each structured day is repeated over and over.

On Oct. 15, journalism students from over 17 different high schools learned what it was like to spend an average day at the hall. It starts at 6:30 a.m. The detainees wash up, and then clean their 9 by 12-foot cell. The concrete floor is washed, and the narrow bunk that was just abandoned is made up. The dimly lit room, which teens call home for an average stay of 240 days, is in crystal-clean condition before its occupants leave for school.

The six-hour school day begins at 8:15 a.m. and ends at 2:30 p.m. The students/detainees attend several general education classes at the facilities.

A set time is allowed for homework and carefully supervised recreation such as team sports. Television is available only by permission of individual coaches.

Dinner is eaten with a flimsy plastic spoon, the only utensil provided.

Time in the halls is structured. Actions of the detainees are limited. There is no room for disobedience, and the coaches are ready to give demerits whenever needed. Receive one of these and be ready to spend more time in the cell.

Demerits are received with such acts as falling out of line, unfolding arms, and talking when not permitted. There is no question on when it is not time to talk - if the booming voice of a coach is heard, it is not time.

In Juvenile Hall, detainees have no say in when or what they can do. Most are there due to a problem with authority. Others due to drugs or gang activity.

In Juvenile Hall, they will hopefully learn discipline. Though it may be harsh, it can be a place to recover and better themselves.

"We yell, but we have hearts and counsel kids," correctional officer Sherry Gilbert said. "We're here because we love kids."

Medical as well as psychological help is provided at the hall. Within three days of admittance, teens are seen by a doctor and are given a physical. The 24-hour medical staff is backed up by the local Children's Hospital and UCSD Medical Center.

While most of the San Diego teen population goes about with all the freedom in the world, the others are in the hall paying the price for a mistake. Detainees can only hope it is a one-time lesson. "I never want to hear someone tell me when I can take a shower or use the bathroom," one detainee said.

Movie Review by Brian Cochran 'Stargate'

Ever since the tomb of King Tutankhamen was found in Egypt in 1922, man has marveled at both the mystery of the buildings and architecture, and the ability to create such wonderment.

Could ancient mankind have built such awe inspiring temples and then simply vanished, leaving no trace of their builders? How likely is it that modern man could not duplicate these creations without modern machinery, yet here they stand without any machinery? No one has been able to answer these questions with any certainty.

However, in a good "what if" movie, Kurt Russell and James Spader offer a unique solution. Beginning with the discovery of an ancient circular object, nearly 70 years ago, we are led to the modern technology of the United States government and the vast resources of our science. Together they attempt to decipher the secrets of the item. Discovering that it could be a gateway, their task is even more desperate for the possibility of what they might find. Spader, who won instant acclaim in the controversial film "Sex, Lies, and Videotape," plays a discredited Egyptologist who believes he has managed to understand the ancient writings on the tombs, when no one else can. Pushed into the secret Stargate Project, he discovers there are those who not only agree with him, but also find his work to be brilliant.

Into this scientific arena comes the inevitable specter of danger. The question, "If this is a gateway, shouldn't we be prepared for anything?" is answered in the form of Kurt Russell. Russell, who began his career as a childhood Disney favorite, is one of the very few successful child actors who has grown into an adult actor. When his career did not seem to be going anywhere, Russell starred in the unlikely camp hit "Escape From New York." In that film Russell demonstrated a toughness and wry sense of humor that belied his child-acting days. He dared the audience to not like the hero-turned-criminal-turned-hero. That success led to many other roles of great variety; everything from the comedy "Overboard" with life partner Goldie Hawn to dramas such as "Backdraft" and "Unlawful Entry." To each of these roles Russell has brought a determination and believability that make the viewer accept the unlikely and enjoy the ride.

One of "Stargate's" flaws is the spare use of Russell's talent. While Spader is definitely leading role material, he does better in a soul searching character like the lead in "White Castle" opposite Susan Sarandon. "Stargate" cannot seem to make up its mind if it is a thriller, an action film, or science fiction. It is not that a film cannot have all three elements, but they need to be blended subtly to carry off the effect. Here, the transition from one genre to another is too stilted not to be noticed.

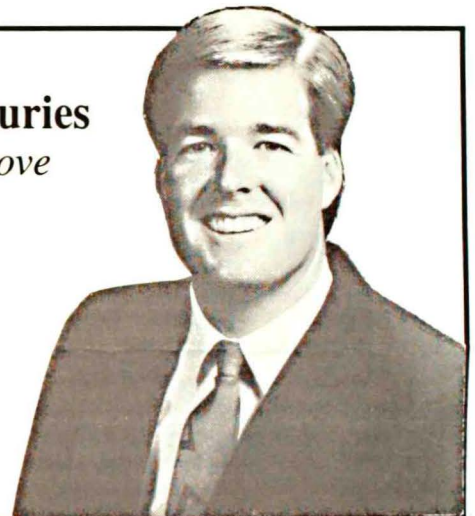

This is not to say the movie is not worthwhile. It has wonderful special effects and the acting of Jaye Davidson is very good. Nominated in his first role in "The Crying Game" for an Oscar, his fans will not be disappointed. Overall, I would give "Stargate" a B rating. I think it is well worth the price of admission, even though it has some problems. One note for the family members; I took my children to see this film and there is nothing offensive in it. But while my 12-year-old son enjoyed it very much, my 11-year-old daughter had a hard time following the Egyptology theme. It helps greatly if one has some basic knowledge of ancient Egyptian culture and lore. While not essential, it helps with enjoying the film a great deal.

College district names new vice chancellor

James Austin has joined the Grossmont-Cuyamaca Community College District as vice chancellor of business, effective Monday, Oct. 31.

"Jim Austin brings a combination of leadership skills, technical skills and people skills to the district," said District Chancellor Jeanne Atherton. "His experience with a multi-campus district made him a particularly strong candidate," she added.

Austin comes to the district from the Los Angeles Community College District where he served as vice president of administration at the Los Angeles Southwest College campus. He received praise in that position for re-organizing and revitalizing the college administration. In addition, he managed the largest community college capital construction program in California while producing a positive college budget balance. "He will be a real asset to our team," said Rick Alexander, Governing Board President. "His excellent background in facilities planning will serve us well."

Austin received his masters in business administration with an emphasis in finance from the University of Utah. His bachelor of science degree was earned at Utah in economics and political science.

The appointment comes after a seven month search by a committee of faculty, staff, administration and trustees. The vice chancellor of business is the chief financial officer of the the district overseeing fiscal planning, budget development, accounting, purchasing, maintenance, operations and auditing. He will be responsible for developing long-range financial plans incorporating financial projections and investment strategies for the district. Additional responsibilities include managing construction programs, administering contracts for Theatre East, and developing new business information systems.

Austin has moved to San Diego with his two dogs. In his free time he enjoys ballroom dancing.

Indian exhibit at Cabrillo

Demonstrations of basket making by local Kumeyaay peoples will be part of the activities during November in the commemoration of Native American Month at Cabrillo National Monument. The demonstrators will create baskets using traditional methods and materials on three Saturdays, Nov. 5, 12, and 19 from 1 to 3 p.m.

On Saturday, Nov. 26, Jane Dumas will make a formal presentation on native plant usage as seen through the eyes of the Kumeyaay. Dumas, whose Kumeyaay ancestors taught her plant identification and uses, will be available from 1 to 3 p.m. She will give a formal presentation at 2 p.m. in the auditorium.

"We hope that these demonstrations will help our visitors learn about the everyday lives and culture of the Kumeyaay," said Superintendent Terry DiMattio. An exhibit, "Early People of San Diego County," will be on display during the month of November. Visitors may purchase Kumeyaay baskets and pottery at the visitor center.

Cabrillo National Monument is open everyday from 9 a.m. to 5:15 p.m. The entrance fee is $4 per vehicle, good for seven days.

The staff hopes that these activities will further emphasize the importance of the native peoples in American heritage.

Commentary

Veterans Day, 1994

by Paul Treske

It was once called Armistice Day and it commemorated the end of World War I, "the war to end all wars."

It made Nov. 11 a national holiday because on that day in 1918 at 11 a.m. the guns finally fell silent in Europe ending a war which started four years earlier.

An agreement was signed later in a railroad car in Compiegne, France, which seemed to assure the world that war was a thing of the past.

For years we celebrated Armistice day on Nov. 11, with parades, visits to the cemetery and a moment of silence at 11 a.m.

Of course, it was not the "war to end all wars." We fought another er from 1939-1945 and still later in Korea and Vietnam. After World War II ended, we renamed Nov. 11, Veterans Day, in honor of Americans who fought and died in all of our nation's conflicts.

Today, many of us get a day off from work or school on Veterans Day, but few stop to think of why and even fewer are familiar with its roots. Of course there are romantic movies about World War I. "All Quiet on the Western Front," "The Fighting 69th" and "Wings" which portray an almost quaint war in which men fought from trench to trench while above, brave flyers flew rickety biplanes in search of the infamous "Red Baron."

But it was a real war in which many died and many more came home crippled by wounds or poisonous gas. And it was America's first reluctant venture into global conflict, a venture repeated too many times since.

But that war is mostly forgotten now, and most of its survivors have passed on. It's interesting to note that May 8, 1945, the end of the war with Germany, is celebrated in Europe but not here. And Sept. 2, 1945, V-J day of World War II is barely noted here except by historians and columnists.

Most of us, if we have Veterans Day off, will find a use for the free time. If we belong to a veterans organization or lost a loved one in one of our wars, we will remember and perhaps pay some kind of homage.

But most of us will barely give a thought to the "why" of the day. In the two "World Wars" we greeted the returnees with parades, confetti and ticker tape, but Korean vets received little notice and those from Vietnam were, to our everlasting shame, reviled upon their return.

We did a little better with Desert Storm, but the status of a veteran doesn't reflect the same pride and glory it once did. That says something about us, although I'm not sure just what. Maybe it's that we no longer believe in wars to end wars anymore.

In any case, I salute my fellow vets who are alive today, and say a prayer for those who are not: Rest well, America still lives.

PG Perspectives

Just do it!

by Phillip Giannangeli

You've probably never thought much about it. Most people haven't. That's understandable because it can be very troubling when you try to analyze it. Nevertheless, we can't escape it, so let's give it a try.

It is quite simple. Just two letters: I and T. Get IT? Like the "who's on first" routine, however, IT can be very confusing. Take IT easy and try not to over do IT. Now then, let's get on with IT.

IT is all around us. There are stickers on cars that say "Do IT in a Toyota" or "Try IT in a Honda." Whatever IT is, IT seems to have an attraction for the foreign. I've never seen a "Do IT in an Oldsmobile" or "Try IT in a Dodge." Maybe American products aren't quite up to IT. Nonetheless, IT does sound interesting. Maybe IT can be adapted to fit American.

IT doesn't end there. How often have you been asked, "Get IT?" IT is usually accompanied by a snicker and a punch on the arm. I always pretend I understand IT even if I don't. IT would be embarrassing if people discovered I'm not really with IT all the time.

When I'm told "Don't forget IT," I think I know what IT is all about. I understand IT to be either a gentle reminder or a threat. If, however, "You" is thrown in right after "Don't," any confusion about IT goes away fast. Better remember IT! And if some Slugo says, "Don't you DARE forget it!" don't take any chances. Carve IT on your forearm.

You deserve IT is one of those double-edged swords we face from time to time. IT can mean that you're very worthy of something or IT can smugly point out that you may have finally got your just comeuppance. IT is not always easy to tell which way IT cuts.

Once there was an actress who was said to really have IT. In her case, it was hard to tell if IT referred to her well defined attributes or some intangible quality she had. Since she's gone, I guess IT is one of those mysteries that we will have to live with.

One of the most deceiving uses of IT is the "How about IT" one. You have no clue if you're being asked a question or if the remark is aimed at the condition of something. To further confuse, IT could be a combination of both - asking to you to respond to the status of something.

IT has many other configurations too. IT can be a mystery or an example. IT can show that you don't know what the heck is going on as in, "You're out of IT," or IT can pinpoint your circumstances as when someone says "You're up against IT." Usually, I'm up to here in IT.

As you can see, IT is complex. IT could drive you crazy. A final word on IT.

IT was a dark and stormy night ...
